

GOSSIP ON INTERNATIONAL
SUBJECTS OF GREAT INTEREST

(Copyright, 1913, by Court Gossip Syndicate.)

Lord Merton, who inherits the titles of the Earl of Nelson, also steps into the use of the annual £50,000 pension granted the House of Nelson for ever on account of the great naval hero's victory in the famous sea fight of Trafalgar.

One of the most valuable relics of Admiral Nelson in existence is a small golden casket, ordered by Alexander Davison, an army contractor, who made the famous sea fighter's acquaintance at Quebec in 1782, and who until his death remained on the closest terms of intimacy with him. This casket was cast in the form of a pyramid out of the eighty-four guineas found after Nelson's death in his desk on board the Victory, Nelson's flagship. Later, when Davison came to financial grief, it was sold at public sale, together with some other Nelson relics, of which the most interesting was a miniature of Lady Hamilton, with a lock of her hair at the back, and which had been removed from his neck after he had received his mortal wound. As late as 1875 the whereabouts of this casket was known. A Pall Mall dealer of curious advertisements for sale, but since then it has been lost track of.

Another £50,000 pension in perpetuity which has made itself famous in the House of Commons was that which arose out of the Duke of Marlborough's services to the British nation. It was made the basis of continued attacks by members of the opposition, and when these came into power the late duke did a wise thing by commuting the annual payment into a lump sum on a liberal scale. But the amount paid out by the British government to the Marlboroughs during the "life" of the pension, to finally get rid of it, was no less than £265,000.

Another pension which was made the subject of considerable criticism was that bestowed by King George III upon the famous litterateur, Dr. Johnson. It was said that a man of Dr. Johnson's pronounced Jacobite leanings ought to have declined a pension granted by the Hanoverians, for the king, who made these attacks good-naturedly, declaring that the pension had been awarded him for his merit in the field of literature. The acceptance of the pension, he maintained, did not change his political principles in the least.

"It is true," he adds, "I cannot now curse the House of Hanover; nor would I be devoted to me to drive the king from the throne. But I think that the pleasure of cursing the House of Hanover, and drinking King James' health, are amply overbalanced by £300 a year."

Pensions are not the only things commended and forgotten. An inquisitive member of the House of Commons was struck by the presence of a policeman in one of the lobbies. He wondered why this particular lobby should always have a guardian strolling up and down, and made inquiries. The records of the House showed that it was found that fifty years previously, when the lobby was being decorated, a policeman had been stationed there to keep members from adding their oaks. The order never having been countermanded, the constable had kept his beat for half a century.

Bismarck, a connoisseur of beverages, ranked coffee almost as highly as beer, but he insisted upon having it pure and unadulterated. When in 1870 with the conquering Prussian army in France, he halted one day with his suite at an inn for refreshment. "Have you any chicory in the house?" was the question he fired at the surprised country boniface. On being answered in the affirmative he commanded the innkeeper to bring him "his coffee." It was brought, Bismarck with his own hands threw it into the road of the roadway and said: "Now, old man, make me a cup of coffee."

The early popularity of coffee in Europe seems to have been on the east side, if the record of the opening of the first coffee house in London is any criterion.

A Mr. Edwards, a merchant, dealing with the Orient, had a Greek servant who used to make coffee for his master and his friends. But the fame of the new drink spread, and Mr. Edwards found the frequent visits of friends old and new were becoming a nuisance. He was growing too popular, and to get over the difficulty he installed his servant in a public coffee house in 1652, and he doubt recommended the place to his friends.

Although most of the world's coffee now is grown not in Arabia, but in South America, there are some States in that section where it is hardly used at all. In Argentina, for instance, the coffee drinkers ask for it. Hence it is classed as a luxury and commands a very high price. The natives drink "mate" or Paraguay tea, but the coffee is not used. This beverage is drunk as freely as beer in Germany or tea in England. After dinner in Argentina many housekeepers serve, instead of coffee, a basin of soup, which strangers find very difficult to swallow. Attempts have been made to introduce mate in Europe, but they never proved successful.

The Kaiser, of whose lawsuit with one of his tenants at Cadmen, Halmuth Sothor, I spoke the other day in comparison with a similar proceeding on the part of his ancestor, the Great Frederick of Prussia, had been threatened last year with a lawsuit more serious than this one, decided against him. The plaintiff in that case claimed to be the heir to Field Marshal von Muench, and stated that in 1785 his sire submitted a feud respecting some property to the arbitration of Frederick the Great, depositing the sum of 50,000 Prussian thalers as security in the Prussian chancery. This money never was returned to the field marshal, although the award was made in his favor and with compound interest was calculated at about 14,000,000 Prussian thalers, or some 40,000,000 German reichsmark. The legal representatives of the Kaiser admitted that Frederick the Great in reality retained the money, but as the present claimant was not able to submit to the court documentary evidence as to his descent from the field marshal, his case was thrown out by the Supreme bench at Leipzig.

The German Embassy at London, where the King and Queen of England were the dinner guests of Prince and Princess Liechtenow, used to be called Prussia House in the days before the empire. It was acquired by the Prussian government on the urgent representation of Prince Wilhelm of Prussia, afterward the first German Kaiser, who had found a harbor here after his flight from Berlin, disguised as a post coach driver during the revolutionary days of March, 1848, as the guest of the then Minister, Baron von Bunsen, the Egyptian of whom it was said that among diplomats he passed for a scholar, and among scholars for a diplomatist.

Kendall, the English town, which is having a very interesting by-election for Parliament, has been contributing to the world's history ever since it was an important Roman station. It also was the birthplace of one English Queen, Catherine Parr, and it gave title to the British government to the late duke. Any present-day historian might find it difficult to rival the conciseness of the epitaph in Kendall Church on the monument of a seventeenth century vicar, which reads as follows:

London bred mee—Westminster fold mee
Cambridge spoil mee—My sister wedd mee
Study taught mee—Kendall caught mee
Which kind of sonata, B flat, No. 10,
Death opposed mee—The grave possessed mee
God first gave mee—Christ did save mee.
Earth did crave mee—And here have mee.

MISCHA ELMAN GIVES
SECOND CONCERT HERE

Long and Exacting Programme Delights Large Audience at the Columbia Theater.

Mischa Elman, the distinguished violin virtuoso, appeared for the second time this season in Washington in a recital at the Columbia Theater yesterday afternoon. Mr. Elman did some brilliant work in a long and exacting programme which included a sonata, B flat, No. 10, by Mozart; the D minor concerto by Wieniawski; a sonata, G major, by Handel; a group of shorter compositions, by Beethoven, Chopin, Paganini, and Brahms-Johann, and "Introduction et Jota" (Sarasate).

It would be impossible to praise too highly the splendid work of this young virtuoso, whose playing is a combination of the freshness, virility, and poetic feeling of youth with the intellectual restraint that comes with mature musicianship, as does Mr. Elman. His playing of the concerto by Beethoven, his bringing off all the heaped-up difficulties with a neat, easy fluency, with an almost whimsical facility, is of the lesser features of the recital. He was in his case in the severe work of the brilliant movements of the Wieniawski, the rapid harmonies of the Brahms-Johann "Hungarian Dance" and in Sarasate's "Introduction et Jota."

Elman's real claim to greatness lies in his sympathetic treatment of every composition. His treatment of the Mozart sonata is an instance worthy of special mention. The cool tone, the exquisite grace, the even, steady tempo, made of this composition the purest tonal arabesque, innocent of passionate feeling, which fall of the classic, formal beauty of the true Mozart. The same treatment characterized his playing of the Handel sonata, his chief work in these compositions seems to be purely of tone, which is of the classic, formal beauty of the true Mozart. The same treatment characterized his playing of the Handel sonata, his chief work in these compositions seems to be purely of tone, which is of the classic, formal beauty of the true Mozart.

Very different was Mr. Elman's treatment of Wieniawski's concerto. Here the emotions are brought into play, and the emotions are sharply marked.

In the beautiful melody of Beethoven's Romance, as well as in the Aria from Pergolesi, Mr. Elman had abundance of opportunity to expend himself on those rich warm tones, which he seems to love so well, and of which he has an inexhaustible variety for emotional expression.

Mr. Elman was most generous with his energies, giving after the Handel sonata, "Ballette," by Shindigalla; after Brahms' "Hungarian Dance," "Schone Rosmarin," by Kreisler, and "Wiggenled," by Schindigalla. Attempts have been made to introduce mate in Europe, but they never proved successful.

HORSE RACERS

sufrage, Senator Bailey said "all these men that are in favor of woman suffrage are merely advocating it as a means to an end. Woman is an emotion," said the speaker. "A highly emotional and moral creature. Every time she sees a man do a thing which she thinks is not quite right, she promptly goes to the Legislature for a law to prevent him from doing it again. She is against a banquet, where the wine sparkles. I believe that women could help our politics, but God knows what politics will do to our women. I believe the freedom of the individual as long as he doesn't do anything that will interfere with the freedom of his neighbors."

Closing his speech, the Texas said: "If we call up our race courses the government will keep up the breeding of good horses for either the army or for any other useful or necessary purpose. I call the horse as the noblest of all God's dumb creatures." Col. R. M. Thompson answered to the toast on "Munting," and said that this branch of the sport made for good citizenship. He urged that the sport be popularized and be organized so as to make it accessible to every person. He had red blood in his or her veins. He particularly invited the farmer to take an interest in the sport, and urged that means be devised which would contribute to the pleasure of the farmer as he contributed to the pleasure of those who are given to the sport of hunting.

Advocates Mutual Betting.
Redmond C. Stewart, of Baltimore, advocated the introduction of the system of mutual betting in speaking on the subject of "Racing." He expressed the wish that the profession of racing men was more honorable, and that there would be more amateur riders. Col. H. T. Allen spoke of "Polo," and expressed the hope that arrangements can be made this year to send an army polo team to Narragansett Pier. He said that the sport is of great value to the service.

W. Irvine Cross answered to the toast of "The Spirit of Fox Hunting As I Have Known It," and said it took precedence over all other outdoor sports.

Perry Belmont said that interest in the breeding of good horses showed patriotism.

Representative C. C. Carlin of Virginia broke a lance in behalf of woman suffrage and said he disagreed with him who argues that we would be in worse position if women were admitted to our politics. He disagreed with him; woman never mingled with anything that they did not make it better," said the Virginian Representative.

Among those who were represented at the banquet were members of the Jockey Club, the Polo Association, American Kennel Club, Recognized Hunts of America, National Renown Association, American Horse Show Association, National Steeplechase and Hunt Association, and others interested in the sports of the turf and the field.

The committee in charge of the dinner included August Belmont, chairman, New York; Col. H. T. Allen, Washington; August Beck, London, Ontario; Paul Crawford, Pittsburgh; Louis J. Lester Jones, secretary, Montpelier Station, Va.

Among those present were: Col. H. T. Allen, Walter R. Abell, L. Clifford Allen, R. Anderson, Hon. Lathrop Brown, Perry Belmont, Hon. Joseph W. Bailey, James H. Berner, Commander Boy-Ed, Gen. James A. has determined upon. The President is laughing at the scandalous fashion, behind his hand and standing pat.

Senators to Meet Wilson.

President Wilson has not made up his mind whether he will insist upon schedule by schedule revision or not. Reports that the President had agreed to sanction an omnibus revision were denied yesterday at the White House. President Wilson told inquirers that he had not made up his mind on this point, and that he would settle the question definitively, so far as he can settle it, within a few days. It is believed that today will witness the determination of the question.

Senator Simmons, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee—the tariff making body of the Upper House—and Senators Stone, Hoke Smith, and Hughes, members of the committee, are to confer with the President this morning.

If they are able to advance sufficiently strong assurances of their ability to prevent log-rolling on an omnibus tariff bill when it reaches the Senate—log-rolling is the vehicle by which special privileges are introduced into a tariff bill—President Wilson will consent to an omnibus bill, always holding over the heads of the legislative branch of the government the threat of executive veto if the bill contains any "irregular" features. If they cannot reassure the President, he will insist upon schedule by schedule revision, the tariff program which the Democratic caucus, and the probabilities are that the tariff program will go through in that form.

The outlining of these differences of opinion between the President and some of the tariff makers does not mean that there is any disposition on the part of legislative leaders to resist leadership in this from the White House. There has been no disposition to buck the President or to deny the fairness of his attitude—that being responsible in the eyes of the country for the tariff program. There should have been a leading voice in its framing. When the bill finally goes to the Democratic caucus for its approval, it will have the united support of the Ways and Means Committee of the House and of the leaders of the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Eye-glasses and Spectacles Only Two Cents Each

YET YOU WOULDN'T PAY EVEN A CENT IF YOU HAD NO NEED OF THEM.

Would You Like to Be Freed From Slavery to Glasses? If So, Read the Interesting Book Now Obtainable Free.

It is predicted that within a few years eye-glasses and spectacles will be as common as the needle and thread, and we may see the signs offering them at two cents a pair. This is consistent with the progress of science in this age of wonders, of flying machines, wireless telegraphy, telephones, phonographs, etc., but not many people are aware of the advancement of knowledge in saving lives and health—including that of the all-important organs of sight.

Eye-glasses are merely Eye Crutches. A book has been written by Dr. Corish, an eminent New York physician, on eyestrain and other eye disorders which cause so much trouble to those afflicted, including the need of wearing eye-glasses or spectacles.

This treatise explains a simple, safe, and home-treatment method whereby one who wears eye-glasses, or fears the need of seeing one, may gradually strengthen the nerves, muscles, and membranes of the eyes until they are in so much better condition that "oppressive windows" are unnecessary. Any one who reads the book soon realizes that Dr. Corish has given the world what it has long desired—a system of eye saving that is absolutely devoid of belladonna, opium, atropine or other harmful drugs, commonly used in eye remedies, and which depend chiefly upon the finer principles of nature.

Dr. Corish has written exhaustively, yet carefully. He comes forward with the edict that eye-glasses must go. His slogan is:

"Throw Away Your Glasses."

The doctor says that eyes can never be disfigured their facial beauty with goggles, but they employed certain natural methods, which have lately been brought to light, which Dr. Corish has improved upon and added to, with the aid of modern science. His book is not written in technical language, even a child can understand it. This brochure is aptly entitled

"How to Save the Eyes."

An edition has been printed which will be given away—one copy absolutely free to every person who asks for it. There will not be a cent paid for it. It is only necessary to write a post card to Dr. Corish, care of the Dept. 533F, Rochester, N. Y., and the book will come to you promptly, in plain wrapper gratis, postpaid.

Health Damaged by Ailing Eyes.

Weak or ailing eyes do not hold their disorders within themselves, but are often allied with other serious troubles, such as headaches, nervousness, neuritis, dizziness, morbid cravings, inability to concentrate thoughts, irritability, depression, and a long train of other afflictions which could be eliminated if the eyes were brought to normal condition, so that glasses need not be worn.

"Worth its weight in gold." is one of the expressions often used in praising Dr. Corish's book. It is interesting for men and women of all ages. This treatise and the method described, as well as parts of our advertisement, are being distributed—as are all good things—by gratis could never replace true gold. Hence, could not be sold.
